

IACD Youth Correspondent Role Description

An IACD Youth Correspondent is an individual liaison between the IACD and community development activists, practitioners, academics and organizations in their home country. It is a voluntary role. S/he has an active and important responsibility in bridging these local professionals who have a passion for and commitment to community development through the IACD with the global community development profession.

Key Responsibilities of Youth Correspondents:

- Be a member in good standing of IACD.
- Liaise with the membership of any national network affiliated to IACD to gather news.
- Send or post community development news items and events from their country to IACD to be included in IACD's e-bulletin or other media (in particular, post on our IACD members' Facebook site: <https://www.facebook.com/groups/IACDglobal/>).
- Make use of opportunities available through their personal and professional networks to share information on IACD's work and their peers in other countries.
- Report monthly to the Membership Secretary on developments, conferences, events, and community-development related news (contact membership@iacdglobal.org)
- Promote the IACD and encourage community development academics, practitioners, activists and organizations to join the IACD as members.
- Maintain regular communications with your Regional Representative (IACD Board member from your region, see: <http://www.iacdglobal.org/regions/>).
- If possible, serve on one of our IACD Committees (see <http://www.iacdglobal.org/governance/>).

If you have any questions, contact the IACD President or Membership Secretary at:
